

Director Andrei Zaharia, a visiting professor at the Department of Theatre sees TWELFTH NIGHT as a play that "confronts all the facets of love and sexual attraction". But in Illyria, love is obscured by a veil of illusion. "This is a play where the only truth is desire, and even the sex is an illusion." As the unusual inhabitants of Illyria play out the comedy, they show us the conflict between the outer appearances, and the illusions that people have about themselves and their choices. "Finally, life itself appears to be an intangible illusion."
